Electoral Studies

Electoral Studies is an international journal covering all aspects of voting, the central act in the democratic process. Political scientists, economists, sociologists, game theorists, geographers, contemporary historians and lawyers have common, and overlapping, interests in what causes voters to act as they do, and the consequences. Electoral Studies provides a forum for these diverse approaches. It publishes fully refereed papers, both theoretical and empirical, on such topics as relationships between votes and seats, and between election outcomes and politicians' reactions; historical, sociological, or geographical correlates of voting behaviour; rational choice analysis of political acts, and critiques of such analyses; the formal and behaviourial properties of electoral systems; and work in game theory, political economy, or social choice relevant to elections. The recent emergence of new democracies in many parts of the world provides a wealth of new information, and scope for testing hypotheses. Electoral Studies also provides comprehensive descriptive coverage of national elections and referendums in the democratic world in its 'Notes on Recent Elections' and 'National Elections: the cycle of elections' features. Articles are refereed before publication. Those wishing to submit articles or notes for publication should send three copies to one of the Editors at the addresses below. "Electoral Inquiry" is a new section of Electoral Studies. Papers published in "Electoral Inquiry" will provide accessible expositions of methodological approaches and techniques useful for advancing the theoretical and empirical study of electoral choice and election outcomes. Submissions for "Electoral Inquiry" are welcome; for additional information, please contact Harold Clarke, Editor-in-Chief. Contributors should refer to the Notes for Authors on the inside back cover.
